

British Airways improves regional service with codeshare

Despite being the United Kingdom's flag carrier, there are a significant number of destinations in the UK not served by British Airways. To increase its connectivity across the UK, British Airways has partnered with UK regional carrier Loganair to expand its range of connections.

Codeshare agreements are an integral part of the aviation industry, and British Airways has them in place worldwide, particularly with other oneworld member airlines. This allows passengers to reach destinations not served by the carrier without opening a separate booking. For example, you could fly from London Heathrow to Chicago with British Airways, then onwards to Los Angeles with American Airlines on the same ticket.
