SWISS has added the latest edition of the Flying Film Festival to its in-flight entertainment programme.

From December to January, passengers on all SWISS long-haul services and in all three seating classes, can view a selection of 13 documentary films by international filmmakers.

The Flying Film Festival was jointly inaugurated by SWISS and filmmakers Francesca Scalisi and Mark Olexa in 2015 and has since been held every two years aboard SWISS's long-haul flights. The aim of the festival, which is centred on short documentary films and animated documentaries is to support young and talented directors from all over the globe and present their works to a broader audience.

This fourth edition of the Flying Film Festival showcases a varied selection of 13 short films from Argentina, Canada, Finland, France, Italy, Lebanon, Morocco, the Netherlands, Qatar, Russia, South Korea, the UK and the US. Detailed information (including trailers) on the films and their makers will be found at swiss-inflightentertainment or flyingfilmfestival.
